

Hermann Friedrich DÖRRIEN & his wife, Agneta WOLTERS

by Robin Cary Askew

Hermann Friedrich Dörrien (aka ‘Frederick Dorrien’), a Merchant of London,<sup>1</sup> was born in Hildesheim, Niedersachsen (Lower Saxony) in about 1670. And he was baptized there on August 9th of that year at the church of St. Andreas (St. Andrew),<sup>2</sup> which was the first church in Hildesheim to embrace Lutheranism.<sup>3</sup> He was the fifth son of Hans Christian Dörrien (1627-1691),<sup>4</sup> “Citizen and Merchant of Hildesheim,” who – at the time of Hermann Friedrich’s birth – was a ‘Ratsherr’ (town councillor) there; and then, from 1678 to 1690, its ‘Riedemeister’ (deputy mayor).<sup>5</sup> In fact he came from a long line of merchants and town councillors of Hildesheim.

His paternal grandfather, Hans Dörrien (1601-1661), ‘the younger’, was also a “Citizen and Merchant of Hildesheim” – and also served there as both town councillor (from 1647) and deputy mayor (in 1649).<sup>6</sup> While his great grandfather, the older Hans Dörrien (1571-1629), who was a “clothier and wool merchant of Hildesheim,” served as Bürgermeister (mayor) in the years 1624, 1626, and 1628.<sup>7</sup> His great, great grandfather, Jacob Dörrien (c.1541-1608), while also a wool merchant and clothier, does not appear to have served on the town council of Hildesheim.<sup>8</sup> But his great, great, great grandfather – also called Hermann – was the mayor of neighbouring Alfeld (a.d. Leine) after 1557.<sup>9</sup> And although Hermann Dörrien is the earliest to have been identified for this pedigree, it has been noted that, since 1448, Alfeld has had one mayor, one treasurer and eight town councillors all bearing the name “Dorry” – or (presumably) one of its many early variants: Dörry, Dorrien, Dörrien, Dörien, Dorring...<sup>10</sup>

Hermann Friedrich Dörrien’s mother was his father’s second wife, Ilse Margaretha Tappen (1633-1672), who had also been married once before – to Johann Rhese, a medical doctor, who had died in 1658. She married Hans (Johann) Christian Dörrien on August 21st, 1660.<sup>11</sup> Ilse Margaretha’s father, Rötger Tappen (c.1590-1673) was himself a town councillor of Hildesheim – and could trace his family back through a long line of town councillors to a namesake, Rötger Tappen: “Burgher of Hildesheim” and ‘Ratsherr’ (town councillor) from 1554.<sup>12</sup> This Rötger appears to have been a son of Zacharias Tappen: “Patricius” (patrician) of Hildesheim, who lived around 1500, when he married Salomé von Damm, whose similarly patrician family was well-known in nearby Braunschweig (Brunswick).<sup>13</sup>

Said to have been one of Braunschweig’s richest citizens and a town councillor there from around 1339, Bürgermeister Tile von Damm was one of the first victims of a tax revolt in the city – known as the “Große Schicht” (Great Uprising) of 1374 in which eight town councillors were killed. Tile von Damm was caught hiding in the Hagen market on the 19th of April, 1374 and immediately beheaded. However members of his family remained “almost without interruption between 1307 and 1671 on the city council of Braunschweig (Brunswick).”<sup>14</sup>

Hermann Friedrich Dörrien however did not follow his father’s footsteps into municipal government. That was left to his older brother, Johann Jobst, who served as Hildesheim town councillor between 1700 and 1704; and its mayor for thirty-two years – from 1706 to 1738.<sup>15</sup>

But Herman Friedrich did follow the example of his father’s other career as a merchant. In 1644, when just seventeen, Hans Christian had gone to Hamburg to apprentice as a “Kaufmanns-Lehre” (merchant-apprentice) and a year later for the next four in Amsterdam.<sup>16</sup> His grandfather, Hans Dörrien – the younger had also gone to Hamburg as an eighteen-or-so-year-old merchant apprentice in 1619. He also made even more extensive “educational visits” to other cities and states: “Cologne, Rouen, Paris, Antwerp, Flanders, the Netherlands and England.” And the older Hans had gone even farther afield: “Leipzig, Nuremberg, the Netherlands, Spain, Brazil, Brabant, Flanders, France and England.”

Although he never knew either his grandfather or his great grandfather, we might speculate that these experiences were passed down to Hermann Friedrich Dörrien as family stories and, combined with the more recent experiences of his father, they may have inspired him – or even laid the way for him – to leave Hildesheim and Saxony behind and seek his fortune in the then growing economic magnet that was London at the end of the seventeenth century.

There is some suggestion that Hermann Friedrich also went first to Hamburg.<sup>17</sup> Perhaps he also apprenticed there as a merchant (Kaufmanns-Lehre) – as his father and grandfather had done before him. But, if he did, he must have decided that his future mercantile prospects would be even brighter in London. And he arrived in England sometime before the end of 1693 – when he would have been twenty-three years old. During the process of his naturalization in England, he was certified to have taken the sacrament on Christmas Day, 1693 “in the true Protestant High German Lutheran late Parish Church, Trinity the Less, London.” He was joined in this by a fellow communicant, Georg Stein.<sup>18</sup> Mr. Stein was then – or would soon become – his partner in business and they would share the same house together with their apprentices (see inset quotation next below). Their naturalizations were complete less than two years later in 1695, on March 15th – having both taken the oath on the previous January 29th.<sup>19</sup>

And so it would seem likely to have been in England where Mr. Dorrien married Miss Wolters in August of 1700 – when he was about thirty and she about twenty-six.<sup>20</sup> This Miss Wolters (or Wolter) turns out to be the sister of one of Mr. Dorrien’s young apprentices, by the name of Peter Wolter, who was tragically murdered, less than a year later by his erstwhile friend and fellow apprentice Herman Strodtman, in whose confession, made on the eve of his execution (18 June, 1701), he mentions the detail of his master’s marriage.

HERMAN STRODTMAN was indicted at the Old Bailey, on three several indictments. The first was for the murder of Peter Wolter, his fellow servant, on the 27th of April, 1701: the second, for breaking open the house of Messieurs Stein and Dorian, and stealing a watch and other things, the property of the said Peter Wolter; and the third for stealing divers goods, the property of Herman Frederick Dorian, on the day before mentioned. ... The Confession of HERMAN STRODTMAN:

“... About the year 1694, my father sent me to school to Lubeck, where I continued till Michaelmas 1698. From thence I went to Hamburgh, and staid there till I fet out for England. I arrived at London in March following, and (together with one Peter Wolter, who came with me to England) was bound apprentice to Mr. Stein and Mr. Dorian, merchants, and partners in London. Peter Wolter and myself, having been fellow-travellers, and being now fellow-prentices, we lived for some time very friendly and lovingly together, till about Auguft laft, when his sifter was married to one of our malters, Mr. Dorian. ....”<sup>21</sup>

However, there is no record of this marriage having taken place at the German Lutheran Church in Trinity Lane, London – of which Mr. Dorrien was a member of the congregation and where he had his children baptised – beginning with his eldest son, Liebert on July 4th, 1701.

“Anno 1701 ... 4 Juli | Liebertus Dorrien Son to M<sup>r</sup>. Friederic Dorrien in Bushlane”<sup>22</sup>

After Liebert, they had nine more children – eight of which were also baptised at the Trinity Lane Church. The last of these being Elizabeth, who was baptised on November 19th, 1712.

“Anno 1712 ... 19 Nov. | Elizabeth Dorryens, daughter to M<sup>r</sup>. Fr. Dorryen March<sup>d</sup> in Sweathin’s [St. Swithin’s] Lane”<sup>23</sup>

But she may not have been their youngest child. Although I have been unable to find a record of their youngest son John’s baptism at the same church, his death on December 9th, 1784, at the age of seventy, would indicate he was born in about 1714. At which time Frau Dorrien (née Wolters) would have been about forty.

But it was still in this Lutheran Church in Trinity Lane that Hermann Friedrich Dörrien – now going by the more Anglicised version of his second Christian name, Frederick – specified in his will he wished to be buried.

“I Frederick Dorrien of London Merchant ... my body I commit to the Earth to be devoutly yett privately buried in the Lutheran Church of the holy Trinity in Trinity Lane London ....”<sup>24</sup>

He does not mention his wife in his will – from which we may conclude she had died sometime before he wrote it on February 3rd, 1732. In Werner Constantin von Arnswaldt’s book on the Dorrien family, published in 1910, she is referenced as actually having died about five or six years earlier in 1726. Von Arnswaldt also gives her year of birth as 1674, indicating she would have been about fifty two years old at the time of her death.

Harmen Friedrich ~ Hildesheim (Andr.) 1670 Aug. 9., † London 1740 (γ 1733) Kaufmann in London ~ . . . . 1700 . . . m. . . Wolters * . . 1674 . . . † . . . 1726 . . . . Englische Linie:<sup>25</sup>

And though Von Arnswaldt repeats the mistaken ‘1740’ year of death for ‘Harmen Friedrich (Dorrien)’, he does include the alternate and correct year of ‘1733’ in brackets. So perhaps we may place some cautious reliance on the dates he gives for Mr. Dorrien’s wife. But there are no clues as to either where she was born or where she died. Though, as at least nine of her ten children were baptised at the Lutheran Church of the Holy Trinity – and more than half of them buried there too – as would her widowed husband be as well, it would seem likely that she too should have been buried there. Except that there appears to be no record of this. And her husband – as already stated – did not mention her in his will – not even to express the wish to be buried near her. Does this imply that she must have died and been buried far away – perhaps in another country even? This and most other sources show only her surname of ‘Wolters’ – but there is one which includes her Christian name, ‘Agneta’ – the burial record of their son, ‘Friderick’:

“Anno 171 ½ [1715] ... '11 marti.. | Friderick Dorrien, filius — Fr. Dorrien, et Agneta Dorrien nat: Wolters / an den misells(?Mazern?) ins gewölbe beigesetzt (from the measles(?) buried in the vault)”<sup>26</sup>

Sadly this little Friderick must have died when he was only a little more than three years old.<sup>27</sup> And he was the second of their sons so named to have died very young. The first to have been baptised with his father’s name was buried on June 28th, 1708<sup>28</sup> – less than nine months after his baptism on September 11th, 1707.<sup>29</sup>

From the father’s will, we learn that only five of their children were still alive when he wrote it. He mentions these by name: his eldest son, Liebert, whom he appoints executor of his will; those two of his daughters, who were already married by then: Agatha, the wife of Charles Halsey; and Ann, the wife of Abraham Boetefeur. And his two youngest still unmarried children: Elizabeth and John.

Agatha, who was the second child of that name – and both presumably named after their mother – was baptised on July 26th 1706.

And Ann (or Anna) – another with a repeated Christian name – was baptised on December 14th 1709.

Frederick Dorrien’s other five children all died very young – within four years of their births: the first Agatha, who was baptised on June 30th 1703 and buried on December 13th 1705; Anna Jacoba baptised March 1st 1705 and buried December 18th of the same year; Friederic baptised September 11th 1707 and buried June 28th of the following year; an unnamed son born dead and buried December 30th 1708; and finally another named Friederick baptised November 2nd 1711 and buried March 11th 1715. Both of these Fredericks have already been mentioned above. And further details of all of the children of Frederick Dorrien and his wife, Agneta née Wolters can be found in the charts below on pages 11-17.

Returning to the question of Frederick Dorrien’s wife; while her name has been established, her origin still remains unclear. We know she almost certainly had a brother, the aforementioned Peter Wolter(s), whose life was so horribly cut short in 1701.<sup>32</sup> It is also fairly apparent that she had at least one other brother named Libert, who became a partner of her eldest son – and his namesake, in whose will he is mentioned.

“I Libert Dorrien of ffenchurch Street London Merchant ... Item I Give and bequeath unto my Uncle and partner Libert Wolters One hundred pounds ....”<sup>33</sup>

While there are no solid clues to the identities of their parents or from where they may have hailed, there are some other references – mostly German – to a Liebert Wolters, who would appear to be the same or possibly his father.

In Margrit Schulte Beerbühl’s book Deutsche Kaufleute in London (‘German Merchants in London’), there are references to both the Dörrien merchant family from Hildesheim and to Liebert Wolters, whose ancestors were members of the ‘Company of Merchant Adventurers of London’ in Hamburg – and whose aunt married an Englishman.

“... In the case of the merchants who migrated to Bremen it is striking that siblings of theirs or other close relatives went to London at about the same time. Thus members of the merchant families of Dörrien from Hildesheim, Vogel from Herford or Teschemacher from Elberfeld settled simultaneously in both Bremen and London during the second half of the 1700s. ....”<sup>34</sup>
 “... The ancestors of Liebert Wolters were members of the Company of Merchant Adventurers in Hamburg and, through an aunt of his by her marriage to an Englishman; he had close links to London. [fn.176] A striking number of the children, relatives or descendants of the founding members of the English Company established offices in both Bremen and London. [fn.177] ....”<sup>35</sup>

I do not know which Liebert Wolters this is referring to – or who either the aunt or her husband may be. Footnote #176 refers to a thesis dissertation, published in German in Cologne, 1969 and written by Reinhard Lohmann, with the title:

Die Familie Wolters in Hamburg während des 17. Jahrhunderts und die Beziehungen von Liebert Wolters Vater und Sohn nach Schweden<sup>36</sup>

So this “Wolters family living in Hamburg during the 1700s and the relations of Liebert Wolters father and son from Sweden” does suggest the hint of a possible clue. But one would have to read the dissertation to learn any more. Footnote #177 reads in my rather uncertain translation:

“Of the founding members of the English Company, Jacob von Berchem, Elard Koithan, Johann Bode and Johann Andreas Uththoff, (had) sons (who) migrated to England. Also the merchants Johann Jobst Vogel, Friedrich Ernst Droop, Dörrien and Teschemacher had close relatives or descendants in England (for the founding members, cf. Kopiebuch der Englischen Kompanie, STA Bremen, 7, 2078/1).”<sup>37</sup>

There are at least two other articles written or co-authored by Margrit Schulte Beerbühl, which deal with the German migration to England: 1. ‘War England ein Sonderfall der Industrialisierung? Der ökonomische Einfluß der protestantischen Immigranten auf die Entwicklung der englischen Wirtschaft vor der Industrialisierung’;<sup>38</sup> 2. Migration and Transfer from Germany to Britain, 1660-1914, in which her article: ‘Commercial Networks, Transfer and Innovation – The Migration of German Merchants to England, 1660-1880’.<sup>39</sup> But neither of these have any references to any member of the Dörrien or Wolters families.

Another publication in German, Lexicon der Hamburgischen Schrifsteller bis zur Gegenwart (Westphalen – Zylius) by Dr. Hans Schröder (Hamburg 1883) has an entry for a Stephan Wolters, Doctor of Theology, which indicates he was “born in Hamburg on 26 July 1645, the son of reformist merchant Libert Wolters, whose father came from Luik (Liège) in Holland, and of Jacoba, née du Bois ....”<sup>40</sup>

And there is a family tree posted on genealogy.com, which shows this Wolters family.<sup>41</sup> However there is no Liebert son of Liebert Wolters there. This Dr. Stephan Wolters is shown to have had a brother – but he was called Abraham Wolters, born 17 April, 1649. Of course this does not preclude the possibility of another brother called Liebert – or of a sister called Agneta for that matter. Though given the time frames, it would be far more likely that our ‘Liebert Wolters’ – he who died in 1761 – would have been of a subsequent generation – perhaps a son of either Stephan or Abraham. And the same likelihood would apply to our Agneta Dorrien née Wolters (1674-1726).

To follow up on the supposed Swedish connection, it can be noted that Abraham Wolters married Eva Sjöhjelm of Stockholm, where he became a ship-owner as well as Beruf Reeder and Commissar. And on the RootsWeb version of the same family tree they are indeed shown to have had a son called Liebert, who was born in about 1671.<sup>42</sup> Although this Liebert Wolters’ occupation is given there as Fähnrich (ensign / officer cadet).<sup>43</sup> And the burial registry of our Liebert Wolters, the “Hamburg merchant” shows that he was 76 when he died in 1761, indicating he would have been born in about 1685.<sup>44</sup>

Yet another book, Your Humble Servant – Agents in Early Modern Europe, edited by Hans Cools, Marika Keblusek and Badeloch Naldus, has the following:

“Another example is the long-term competition in which the Swedish factor in Hamburg, Liebert Wolters, and the Swedish post commissioner Barthold Huswedel were engaged. Their quarrel was about the opportunity to act as merchant for Johan Rosenhane, head of the Wismarer Tribunal in Wismar. [fn.34] ....”<sup>45</sup>

This footnote #34 references “letters from Wolters and Huswedel to Rosenhane.” And also refers the reader to the Reinhard Lohmann 1969 thesis dissertation mentioned above.

And that about exhausts my current search for the family of the presumed Wolters brothers and sister: Peter, Liebert and Agnata.

From just one of the previously mentioned sources have I been able to learn that Hermann Friedrich Dorrien had a partner named Georg Stein – that being the report on the murder of his apprentice and brother-in-law, Peter Wolters and its included confession by the killer, Herman Strodtman.<sup>46</sup> Actually neither of these mentions Mr. Stein’s first name of Georg. Nor does another published account of the murder: The Newgate Calendar ... Vol. 1, by William Knapp and William Baldwin, published in London, 1824. But – given the fact that both Herman Friedrich Dorrien and Georg Stein were both certified to have taken the sacrament on Christmas Day, 1693 together at the German Lutheran Church in Trinity Lane, London <sup>47</sup> (also referred to above) – it is reasonable to suppose that this Georg Stein was one and the same as the partner in business, Mr. Stein.

That both Mr. Dorrien and Mr. Stein took the sacrament at the German Lutheran Church on Christmas Day, 1693 is recorded in The Manuscripts of the House of Lords (as found in snippet views on a Google Books search) <sup>48</sup> The same Google search shows it was also reprinted in a publication of the Huguenot Society of London. And a similar search on the National Archives site will show it in a much more accessible format. <sup>49</sup>

Cosserat's Naturalisation Act HL/PO/JO/10/1/469/871 9 Jan 1694

"Amended Draft of an Act for naturalising of Bernard Cosserat, als Mourté, and Alexander Ringli and others. Identical with Act, except that the names contained in the separate schedules on the Roll were added by the Commons (see Annex f) below.)

f) 11 Feb -- Certificates that the persons added to the Bill by the Commons had taken the Sacrament, the first five in the true Protestant High German Lutheran late Parish Church, Trinity the Less, London, signed by John Esdras Edzard, the Minister, and Theodore Jacobsen and David Becceler, the Trustees of the said church; ...

f1) Herman Frederick Dorrien, on Christmas Day. Dated 1 Jan Attested Henry Ulcken, Peter Willoke.

f2) Georg Stein, on Christmas Day. Dated and attested as preceding.

[These documents are held at Parliamentary Archives]

Or was his surname actually 'Stehn'? Although all of these sources (referred to above) show his name as 'Stein', the same Huguenot Society publication has – on the very same page – the following:

<sup>8</sup> FREDERICK HERMAN DORRIEN, born at Hildersheim in Germany, son of John Christian Dorrien and Anna Margreta, his wife.

While we know this journal must be mistaken in identifying Frederick Herman (sic) Dorrien's mother as 'Anna Margreta,' who was actually his father's first wife, rather than the correct second wife, Ilse Margreta (to use their same spelling for her second name) – the identification of 'George Stehn', rather than 'Georg Stein', does lead to a number of other sources with this gentleman's name so written – particularly:

... Indenture bearing date the fifth Day of September 1729 and made between the said Jacob Jacobsen by the name of Sir Jacob Jacobsen, Knight, Clement Boehm and Henry Sperling of London, Merchants, Herman Frederick Dorrien of Hamburg, Merchant, Joban Henrick Boock and George Stehn of London, Merchants, of the one part, and Martin Ludolph of London, Merchant, of the other part ... reciting that the said (folgen die Trustees von 1702) were all dead and that the said Sir Jacob Jacobsen, Henry Sperling and George Stehn had declined acting in the said trust. .... <sup>51</sup>

Here it is interesting – and perhaps not a little curious – that in 1729 Herman Frederick Dorrien is given as being "of Hamburg;" while his still or one-time partner, George Stehn (aka Georg Stein) is given as being "of London."

It is true that Mr. Dorrien did maintain entitlement to a house in Hamburg – as he so states in his will, written in 1732. <sup>52</sup> But he tells us there that it was then occupied by his son-in-law, Charles Halsey, who was married to his eldest surviving daughter, Agatha. In fact they were married in Hamburg on the 16th of January 1727. And most of their children appear to have been born there. But it is far from apparent that Mr. Frederick Dorrien ever went back to live in Hamburg himself – although he almost certainly continued to conduct his trading business between there and London. As well as elsewhere:

[Oct. 31.] 1172. Messrs. Stehn and Dorrien, of London, Merchants, to the Queen. On behalf of the owners and freighters of a neutral ship, the Betty galley of Stade, pray for a passport for said ship to trade with the Spanish West Indies. Signed, Stehn and Dorrien. Annexed, 1172. i. HM refers this petition to the Council of Trade and Plantations for their opinion. Oct. 31, Whitehall.

Signed, Sunderland. [CO. 389, 19. p. 175.] <sup>53</sup>

This clearly shows that Messrs. Stehn and Dorrien were still in business together in 1707. Whether or not they were still residing in the same house as in 1701, I do not know. Going back to the published reports on the murder of Peter Wolters in his bedchamber at the house of Messrs. Stein and Dorrien, none of them mentions the address of said house. But as the murder took place on the 27th of April, 1701; and Mr. Dorrien's residence may be taken as having been in Bush Lane at the time of the baptism of his eldest child, Liebert on the 4th of July of the same year, it is quite possible – if not likely – that this was also the address of the house he shared with his partner, Mr. Stehn (I think it more likely that the correct form of his name was 'Stehn') together with their apprentices a few months earlier.

Bush Lane remains the address given at the baptisms of most of Mr. Frederick (he has now dropped the use of his first name Herman) Dorrien's children to follow his first born, Liebert. The last time Bush Lane was so given was at the 14 December, 1709 baptism of his seventh child Anna.

The next address that appears for the family is St. Swithin's Lane – given at the baptism of his ninth child and youngest daughter, Elizabeth.

"Anno 1712 ... 19 Nov. | Elizabeth Dorryens, daughter to M<sup>r</sup>. Fr. Dorryen March<sup>d</sup> in Sweathin's Lane"<sup>56</sup>

As to how much longer after 1707 Mr. Dorrien remained in partnership with Mr. Stehn – I have found no source or record to tell me. However, while there appears to be very little information for George Stehn (or Stein) – aside from those references already mentioned, I have found two other possible references: firstly, a marriage in the London diocese between a George Stehn and an Anne Peltzer in 1704;<sup>57</sup> and secondly, the will of a "George Stehn of Uburne in the County of Bucks Esquire" written on January 24th 1728 and probated on July 23rd 1735.<sup>58</sup>

In this will Mr. Stehn does not mention a wife Anne; but he does make his first bequest to a "Sarah Peltzir [sic] Daughter of Mr Matthew Peltzir late of London Merchant deceased ..." This does rather indicate he was the same George Stehn who had married Anne Peltzer some twenty-four years earlier. And – although he does not mention any occupation for himself beyond 'Esquire' – the identification of Mr. Matthew Peltzir (Peltzer) as a merchant is quite suggestive. Furthermore another of his beneficiaries provides a connection to the Lutheran church in Trinity Lane, London. He makes a bequest to his "Daughter in Law Mrs. Anne Ludolph the wife of Mr. Martin Ludolph." The 'Hamburg Lutheran Church Register' has an entry for the naturalization of Martin Ludolf in 1717 – immediately following a similar entry for one Abraham Boetefeur.<sup>59</sup> Abraham Boetefeur – as already mentioned above – would later marry Frederick Dorrien's daughter Ann in 1735.

And then there is the reference in Dr. Johann Martin Lappenberg's Urkundliche Geschichte des Hansischen Stahlhofes zu London to that indenture of September 5th 1729 (already quoted on the previous page) which links the names of "... Herman Frederick Dorrien of Hamburg, Merchant, ... and George Stehn of London, Merchants, of the one part, and Martin Ludolph of London, Merchant, of the other part ...."<sup>60</sup> But although they were named as party to the same indenture in 1729, there is no indication that Messrs. Dorrien and Stehn were still in partnership at that time. Nor that they were not.

Aside from the trade to the Spanish West Indies circa 1707 (also mentioned on the previous page), Frederick Dorrien can be found listed amongst other English merchants who were engaged in trade with Portugal around 1724. In this instance he has signed his name to a petition requesting the appointment of the Rev. Arthur Young, LL.B., as chaplain to the factory at Lisbon.<sup>61</sup> This was following on several complaints over the years at the alleged mistreatment of English Protestant merchants and their families residing in Portugal.

At this point we might remember that, according to just one source, Frederick Dorrien's wife Agneta died sometime in 1726<sup>62</sup> – and not presumably in or near London – there appearing to be no record of her having been buried at the Lutheran church in Trinity Lane.<sup>63</sup> Early the next year on January 16th their eldest surviving daughter Agatha was married in Hamburg to Charles Halsey.<sup>64</sup>

On January 6th 1732 their second surviving daughter Ann married Abraham Boetefeur at the Holy Trinity Church.<sup>65</sup> And the following year Frederick Dorrien died and was buried at the church on November 26th 1733.<sup>66</sup>

TRANSCRIPTION OF THE LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT OF FREDERICK DORRIEN, MERCHANT OF LONDON

written: 3 Feb. 1732; and proved: 21 Nov. 1733 <sup>1</sup>

Transcription notes: where there are words (or parts of a word) I have been unable to decipher, I have replaced them with _____. Where a word is surrounded by ^__^, this indicates that the word in question in the original was added in the margin to be understood as meant to be where a ^ appears in the main body of text. I have attempted to adhere to the original spelling and capitalization of words – though in some instances I may be guessing at a word – but only if I am reasonably sure of it based on other examples elsewhere in the will. There is, in fact, a fair bit of repetition contained therein! And finally I have taken the liberty of adding paragraphs that do not exist in the original – just to make it a little easier to read.

Wherever I have been unable to decipher the words from the photocopy of the original page, I have inserted dashes or a series of dots. Some words or phrases which may be in doubt are followed by a question mark in brackets (?). And I have also placed some possible words – and/or their translations – within the same style of brackets. Where I know what the word or name should be, I have added that within square brackets [ ].

Master, and set fire to his house. / HERMAN STRODTMAN was indicted at the Old Bailey, on three several indictments. The first was for the murder of Peter Wolter, his fellow servant, on the 27th of April, 1701: the second, for breaking open the house of Messieurs Stein and Dorien, and stealing a watch and other things, the property of the said Peter Wolter; and the third for stealing divers goods, the property of Herman Frederick Dorien, on the day before mentioned. / From the depositions of the witnesses it appeared, that the prisoner having been discharged the service of Messieurs Stein and Dorien, for some misdemeanours, about three days before the fact was committed, took lodgings at the Sun Alehouse in Queenstreet, and told the master of the house, that his father was a merchant in Saxony, and that he was come to London to learn the English language, after which he was to go to the West Indies; and that his cloaths were to arrive that evening by the carrier. .... // The Confession of HERMAN STRODTMAN. "In the year 1683, or a little before, I was born at Revel in Lisland, and had the happiness to come of a good family; my parents being of some account in the world, and also a godly and religious people, who took great care of my education. / About the year 1694, my father sent me to school to Lubeck, where I continued till Michaelmas 1698. From thence I went to Hamburgh, and staid there till I set out for England. I arrived at London in March following, and (together with one Peter Wolter, who came with me to England) was bound apprentice to Mr. Stein and Mr. Dorien, merchants, and partners in London. Peter Wolter and myself, having been fellow-travellers, and being now fellow-prentices, we lived for some time very friendly and lovingly together, till about August last, when his sister was married to one of our masters, Mr. Dorien. ...." On April 30, 1717, William Poynty, the Consul at Lisbon, wrote that he had obtained a piece of ground for the burial of Protestants dying in that city.<sup>1</sup> This privilege was only obtained after continual application by the British factory to the Portuguese Government. The cemetery at Lisbon has been considered one of the most beautiful in Europe.

"Notwithstanding this Concession at Lisbon the Portuguese in the following year appear to have taken strong measures at Oporto to prevent the exercise of the Protestant religion. A merchant at whose house divine service had been performed was ordered to leave within eight days. The merchants petitioned for interference on their behalf against this arbitrary conduct, and amongst the signatures I find that of Stephen Dupuis.<sup>2</sup> Mr. Secretary Delafaye replied to this memorial saying that it could 'make no material difference whether they performed their devotions in one house or another, and [p. 348] for their own ease and interest they should by good-humour and gentle methods seek to win the affection of the people they lived with.'<sup>1</sup> ...

In England, Scotland, and Ireland : From the Year 1700, to the present Time*, Vol. 1, London, Cooke [1768] pp. 32-44 > The Trial and Behaviour of HERMAN STRODTMAN, who murdered his Fellow-'prentice, robbed his Master, and set fire to his house. / HERMAN STRODTMAN was indicted at the Old Bailey, on three several indictments. The first was for the murder of Peter Wolter, his fellow servant, on the 27th of April, 1701: the second, for breaking open the house of Messieurs Stein and Dorien, and stealing a watch and other things, the property of the said Peter Wolter; and the third for stealing divers goods, the property of Herman Frederick Dorien, on the day before mentioned. / From the depositions of the witnesses it appeared, that the prisoner having been discharged the service of Messieurs Stein and Dorien, for some misdemeanours, about three days before the fact was committed, took lodgings at the Sun Alehouse in Queenstreet, and told the master of the house, that his father was a merchant in Saxony, and that he was come to London to learn the English language, after which he was to go to the West Indies; and that his cloaths were to arrive that evening by the carrier. .... // The Confession of HERMAN STRODTMAN. "In the year 1683, or a little before, I was born at Revel in Lisland, and had the happiness to come of a good family; my parents being of some account in the world, and also a godly and religious people, who took great care of my education. / About the year 1694, my father sent me to school to Lubeck, where I continued till Michaelmas 1698. From thence I went to Hamburg, and staid there till I set out for England. I arrived at London in March following, and (together with one Peter Wolter, who came with me to England) was bound apprentice to Mr. Stein and Mr. Dorien, merchants, and partners in London. Peter Wolter and myself, having been fellow-travellers, and being now fellow-prentices, we lived for some time very friendly and lovingly together, till about August last, when his sister was married to one of our masters, Mr. Dorien. ...." This location is somewhat unlikely for either his birth or his christening in December 1727 given the marriage of his parents at Hamburg in January 1727. Their next children – presumably twins, Charles and John, were born in 1729 at Hamburg (see next two endnotes). And they were followed by five more children also apparently born in Hamburg (between 1731 and 1736). The first of their children undoubtedly born in England was Amelia – christened at St. Olave Hart Street, London in 1740 (see endnote #91 below).

- 118 a) There is no baptismal entry for Henry Boetefeuer in the Guildhall Library Index of the Registers of the Hamburg Lutheran Church. However in his letter to me, Howard Doble, Senior Archivist, London Metropolitan Archives, 40 Northampton Road, London, EC1R 0HB, www.cityoflondon.gov.uk/lma – Libraries, Archives and Guildhall Art Gallery – dated 11 March 2011, accompanying their report on a Family History Research Service, wrote the following: "Henry Boetefeuer: the date and year of the baptism is unclear. The page of the register in which the entry is located would indicate that the baptism took place at a date in 1734/1735." See next.

However in his letter to me, dated 11 March 2011, Howard Doble, Senior Archivist, London Metropolitan Archives (see endnote for Henry Boetefeuer above), wrote the following: "Elizabeth Boetefeuer was baptised in 1735, on the 31st day of the month. Again, the month in which the event took place is unclear in the register entry, although it would seem to be May." MY NOTE: from my view of the photocopy of the original register, I would say there is little doubt the month is May. See next.

c) Guildhall Library Index of the Registers of the Hamburg Lutheran Church, p. 4 > "d 14 02 1746 BOETEFEUR Elisabeth; 8 years." MY NOTE: assuming this is the same Elisabeth Boetefeur as she who was baptized on 31st May, 1735 (see immediately above), she should have been 10 years old at her death/burial. However, it does clearly state she was 8 years old in the original register. See next.
